The first part in red:

You could fool a lot of people in this community... Some people might not say it, because sadly you are in control of the biggest forum for them to gather at.

The second part in yellow:

I imagine most people have a life outside this place, but you sure find your way back here real fast when it involves the reputation of you and your personal community.

But if you are saying you don't have sufficient time to properly run this place, maybe you should consider passing it on to someone else. Instead of just delegating, then coming back and using your authority to protect people that are part of your personal community. (Yes, I already know this will never happen, just saying)

I wouldn't actually call this place neglected either, I personally think Gozy does a wonderful job, and he is not bias (from what I can tell at least). I figure most would agree with that. Without him I think this forum would have just went to spam and shit a long time ago.

Yes, most people have a life outside of the online world, I believe Gozy even has a kid, right? At least he still finds time to keep these forums somewhat in line, you only seem to come on when it involves you and your personal community/image.

There is a huge difference between paying the bills and actually running a place. I thought you would have known that, as I recall you ran your own business in real life...

Yea, there is a huge difference, but then there are some similarities as well.
