Spoony wrote on Thu, 01 March 2012 14:07stop whingeing about how people don't have sufficiently high opinion of your "moral calibre"... how many times have you told wilo that his actions - both before and since the XWIS sanction - were killing st0rm? it wasn't anyone here who killed st0rm, it was wilo. he deliberately chose to see st0rm crumble rather than just stop e-attacking people. be honest now, did you make a serious attempt to tell him that? no, instead you rail on and on at the people who said "it's about time we stopped this". if you want your moral calibre to be recognised i must say i'm not impressed so far

but you're not stopping this at all... all you achieved was shut down the storm server.. that doesn't stop him from e-attacking whatsoever... if anything it encourages it more (no this is not a threat, its just an observation on human psychology)

for the record, I didn't tell him myself, because there's already plenty of other people doing exactly that and I don't have anything extra to add. I rail on here because I do have something extra to add... mainly logic and reason, which the mass hatred has left many blind to and causing them to commit logical fallacies like guilt by association or "you're either with us or with the terrorists" type of statements.

Lastly.. moral calibre should only be defined by what we do, not what we don't do. If its defined by what we don't do, then everyone here (and almost everyone on earth) is human scum because we should stop wasting our money on games and instead donate it all to the hungry and saving their lives rather than wasting it on cheap entertainment.
