The architect then hides himself in an iron fortress so he can't be caught and punished in any way.

Should all the tenants in the houses built by the architect be forced to evict so the architect's buildings can be torn down to be fair? Or even if not torn down, must all tenants leave their buildings or be associated with evil? Would doing so really hurt the architect in any way? >_> <_< don't be so dramatic. you didn't actually suffer from anything the XWIS sanction did. you didn't lose anything you were entitled to.

you've yet to suggest a different option. i can think of several people who have; myself, crimson, liquid. they've all been violently rejected.

Quote:I'm just saying this method of dealing with it isn't achieving squat, other than hoping that wilo will somehow lose his incentive to crash other servers if the storm server is dead (which seems like a pretty far-fetched hope to me).
it's achieved quite a lot actually, it's sent a clear message to scum like wilo. now ppl know that there are consequences for these e-attacks. it's also discredited wilo himself (there are still a few gullible twats leftover, alas)

Quote:Quote:why didn't you do what the rest of the people in st0rm (that mattered) do that's probably why: I don't matter. I don't hold any position of power. I could follow suit and tell him what everyone already told him or leave the server, but to him it'll be identical to just some random hopping on the bandwagon. It doesn't make any difference lol.
maybe the next time someone is hell-bent on destroying a server you enjoy, how about you grow a pair and stand up to him, instead of waiting for it to all be over so you can rail at his victims instead.

maybe railing at the people who actually did something about this situation - and who did more to help st0rm out than you did - makes you feel better about what you should've done but didn't have the balls to, it seems. you want absolution for inaction? wilo was destroying your community, crimson was offering to save it, and i was telling wilo the laughably simple solution to the whole problem; you, meanwhile, are just waiting for the whole thing to finally disappear then you tell us we should've done it differently? (you haven't yet said how, but hey... turning up late seems to be your style
