I think reborn just won this thread.

However, something I just don't get is why the w3d community has to be fighting each other all the time. Whether it be APB vs Reborn, Aircraftkiller vs BHP, Renforums vs BHP etc. etc.

Sure BHP broke off from the hosting provided by Crimson without much notice, and are now supporting themselves; but even though it wasn't right in many people's eyes, it isn't a reason to sit around and hate BHP profusely. I personally feel that the people organising the move on BHP's side should have talked to Crimson about it, but it's too late now and it can't be un-done.

One of the main reasons that BHP broke off was because Blazer was given the courtesy of being allowed into the staff forums, but neglected to change his password after a hack/leak/something along those lines; this led to hackers and leakers getting into the staff forums and getting away with some internal test builds. It's wasn't cool, but it was dealt with.

What I can't fathom however, is the fact that BHP are working to make the Renegade community better by testing the new scripts builds so that they don't asplode when they go public and making unique, free game experiences based on other C&C games; but you guys throw shit in their direction regardless. Redirecting apathbeyond.com to meatspin, for example, is a move that only proves to everyone how petty this is and also hurts the community by making us all seem like a bunch of idiots to outsiders. If people on both sides actually cared and communicated a little more, we could bridge these gaps and stop acting like children wanting revenge and payback for every little negative thing that happens.

Granted that several people from BHP aren't easy to get on with and throw shit back, it isn't justified to rail on the entirety of BHP for it. A minority of people there are ruining it for the rest of us. It makes me wonder why people don't see how good our communities could compliment each other if we showed a little respect and cooperation towards each other.

We should all take a step back and think, is this what our overall community has devolved into? Petty infighting revolving around stuff like "You called me a mean lady on the internet so I'm going to troll you into the ground." and "They haven't released that free game yet so they can die in a fire."

For example, I'm a member of BHP, but I've got nothing against the Renegade community. I'm not biased. I just wish both our communities could just fucking get along for once, instead of it being the same old shitfest that it is. A lot of us aren't kids here so why are there unnecessary grudges being held on both sides?

If you're wondering why Aircraftkiller is defending the Apocalypse Rising guys over at BHP, it's because we don't deal into the drama and shitfests that happen and remain impartial to it. I think if we viewed everyone's argument fairly without judging people based on their past and tried to get along instead of trolling each other into brown town constantly, we'd all be a lot better off.

Renegade is 10 years old now; we should be celebrating the fact we're still here instead of having punch-up after punch-up.
