OMFG you are a moron. Blazer is more than a sysadmin. He's a systems engineer. He maintains several servers for the Cisco Networking Academy that house various databases, websites, and test results. He manages server moves, performance, monitoring... If something breaks, he fixes it. He's not some simple password reset monkey. And he's in CCNA1 because, well, that's where you have to start.

Before Cisco, he worked for Qwest managing a team of systems engineers, and also helped design their current network of DNS servers.

I was not fired from my last job due to performance. Where do you get this?? I was laid off. If I were fired, I wouldn't be pulling from unemployment right now.

I'm NOT a self-proclaimed leader of the RenGuard team. When have I ever said that anyone other than mac leads the team. I HAVEN'T. I registered the domain for the RenGuard website, I hosted it, and I maintain it. That doesn't mean I lead the team. Neither does Blazer.

You don't have to have certifications to work for Cisco. You obviously don't work for them. I back up the claims of RenGuard by looking at the prior successes of the RenGuard team. The members of the team have produced other things for Renegade... where do I start listing them?

Now please, go away.
