Jerad actually made a rather good point, since Facebook IS essentially toast if it goes down while if G+ is a flop, Google's going nowhere. But then again, I use Android on my phone and Chrome on my computers so they already log all my search history, website history, and god knows how much they log on my phone.

The thing with Facebook selling information is like... well: they can make a shit pile of money off of selling information on people (Facebook arguably knows more about most people than they do themselves), so of course they're going to fucking do it!
