I'm going to assume you Googled around after posting this, realized the senator who proposed it has done so at the beginning of each new Congress sitting since the start of the century.

I'm also going to assume you found out that the bill has been defeated each time.

I'm also going to hope that since you're RenegadeForums expert numero uno here on the US government, you'd know that a bill to repeal a constitutional amendment would require house approval, senate approval and approval from 3/4's of the states.

I recommend you stick to your theories that once the population possess glistening teeth and healthy gums, our collective smiles will reflect sunlight to Jupiter and send the signal for the impending alien invasion.
