Good point on the tidal wave thing, using that knowledge the tidal wave may never even form properly before hitting Britain because of the small distance between the countries. The dust cloud is still un-arguable though. Your lucky in not one of those assholes that picks on spelling mistakes. Not that you care.

Actually ignore that. Once the shockwave and the winds hit the air pressure will follow, literally sucking the ocean out from underneath itself. Also there would be rushing air behind it, pushing it.
