AircraftkillerI hate having to "choose sides" here but you're both wrong, and you're both right... This stupid bickering among friends makes me go "bleh whatever" and write replies like this.

1. She owns the domain. You do not. She can do with it what she will.
2. Even if she owns it, it's still pretty shitty to take it and switch it over to her network.
3. Posting topics like this to air dirty laundry in public is wrong. You know that.
4. This entire situation reeks of "eww I just stepped in horse shit" so I'm going to leave it at this.

You're both wrong, you're both right, find some way to solve the problem without being assholes to each other.

Jon, I couldn't agree more, but she has had a week to respond to our requests and she has ignored it. I do want this to end peacefully, but I am an impatient person.
