Exactly, and Ack, not just because I don't want flame wars (which only tear apart the community), but also for your own good: you're not gonna make friends flaming this and that. Why not telling the people from Reborn how they could improve? No this is not the real professional company life, so you can still help others out. And believe me, you'll need friends in such a competitive industry (people could help you getting a job, people could help you arrange stuff, like a studio or something).

I've been exploring the game industry for a while so believe me when I say making friends is a lot more beneficial than making enemies. I know making enemies is much easier, but just give making friends a try
