Terran_Drone:rolleyes: Man, whom are you quoting? My point is that the word "sucks" isn't being used by those companies, so it's not insulting in the way ACK is insulting Reborn.

I'm not gonna spell this out any further for you, either read and give usefull comments or don't comment at all. And as I said before: stop nitpicking

Who am I quoting? No one. Just because you view commercials in one way (which hapens to be the same way I do) doesn't mean someone won't view them in the way that I've proposed. And yet you STILL fail to understand WHY they don't use words like that. So I'll explain it again.

In the law there is this little thing called defamation that prevents one company from defaming another in an attempt to keep competition healthy. However, if given the chance, one company would bring up the competitions dirty little secrets in an attempt to get the consumer to choose them over the others. How do I know this? There is no such defamation law concerning political advertisements (at leasts in the States), and if you've ever seen 99% of Americas political advertisements, they're all about "look what this person voted yes/no on! They're cruel and inhumane! Vote for me because I won't do that". And yes, this is a very toned down replay of the advertisements.

Wow, three times explaining the same thing... and yet your telling me to read?
