I must say that I am not a big fan of anime. Although I do watch a great many of them on TV and on DVD. DBZ has used the same story format since the beginning, as have most anime. It's sad.

ending jap obsession with 'battles.' I think at most that there are three maybe four different story formats for anime...they are over used and rely too heavy on the watchers ignorance and willingness to watch over plotted storylines. even Akira (i cant wait to be flamed for this one) and Ghost In The Shell use the same formats that DBZ, GW, GiantRobo, molldiver (- not sure about the name of the last one, I only had the dvd for a few hours,) and a shit load of other series that i watched.

I would rather read the original Manga, then sit and watch a half hour of badly written dribble.

Some anime is good, some is funny, some is even thoughtful, but most is utter crap. Not many good scripts come out of Japan. There are writers out there in Japan who are never heard. They are the good ones. The people who commision cartoons in Japan would rather use the same old crap writing formulas and formats then go with some thing new.

Why take the risk?

note of the story structure. You will see what I mean.

Oh yeah. one last thing. If like GW and other anime. Go to your local comic book store and order some of the Manga... Its better to read then watch.

WWE sucks the big one.
