For high-school drop-outs: welfare recipient.

For high-school graduates who don't go to college: sanitation worker or janitor.

For college drop-outs: small business owner.

For college graduates: business executive.

For college graduates who continue their education in graduate school: investment banker or lawyer.

What's the moral of the story? The longer you stay in school and get a good education, the better job you can get and the more money you can make.

Of course, there are special cases where some people get a well-paying job even if they drop out of college (as in the case of Bill Gates), most people aren't so lucky .
