warrantol'm going to get it for saying this I'm sure, but if Bush is completely anti-terrorist as he claims to be (suggesting neutrality, not pro-terrorism here), why did he wait to be attacked before going out to get them, when terrorist activities can be viewed almost every day in other parts of the world?

Because they made a vicious attack(s) on our (capitol) cities, which would dictate a more aggressive response than one from witnessing some random acts of terrorism committed by some overseas country against another that we don't give a rats ass about?

I see people break the law almost everyday, do I do anything about it? 99.9% of the time no. I don't have time to go and meddle in everyones affairs and try to save the world. But if someone breaks the law in my own backyard, they get the smackdown.
