Quote: They have no real reasons for wanting Kerry in office other than the fact that he's "not Bush".

Voting someone into office for that kind of stupid reason could lead to disaster. Unfortunately, most of the population does not read up on their candidate before voting for them; all they care about is that a particular candidate is part of their favorite political party. There are people who are very conservative who vote liberal just because they've always voted that way, and there are liberals who always vote conservative for the same reason.
