Hmmmm sad to see trends are still alive ... I asked what do you think about the man.

I got to sit in on some of the hearings (not those with himl was there on Thursday) and the rest a group of us watched and discussed them. We had hoped with the previous statements that had been released that the commission might actually do some good but the consensus is taht when it degenerated with obvious bipartisan politics with regards to Clark that it would end with little or no credibility.

As for his comments made on background he answered the question before the committee quite ably.

I am not really sure of his motives but whatever they are his actions required courage.
