i do hate for when people lose respect for me, but i can't help my feelings. with all of the gay rights movements, i feel that it's my duty to put out there what i believe and stand firm. what's wrong in wanting a gay free world? to you, you may see it as racism, but it's far from that. im not discriminating against the people, im discriminating against the sin, the choice that they have made. they may not have chosen to be homosexual, but they made the choice to act upon that urge. as a consequence for it, they should not be able to have the same rights as a normal (man and woman) married couple. it's not a sin to be tempted, but it is a sin to indulge in it. im basically against all who see it as what was intended to be, that it's okay to act upon that urge. athiests and non-believers have a harder time to see my point. believers may not approve of how im acting upon my belief and faith. i'm not going for approval, im setting out to let people know that I don't approve of it and as long as there's a fight, i will stand in the thick of it. i don't wish to lose people's respect for me, but i am not doing this for popularity. i could care less if the majority of the world feels that im a nusience(sp). i see the approval of homosexuals as deterioration of our standards. we used to see homosexuality as not acceptable, but now we're letting our opinions change because we don't wanna be "unfair". life is unfair, deal. if it were okay to be homoxexual, God would have created Adam and Steve, not Adam and Eve.

Edit: I changed the idea of "victory at all cost" because that sounded more extreme than my actual feelings.