AircraftkillerYes, it does - they're wrong to me.

Ever think of that? I suppose not.

Now, if you'd think about it... Who's going to really understand the destructive power of something unless it is released in an environment where it can prove its worth?

That's the point, that's why we dropped them on their civilian cities.

Yes I did think of that, saying "You're wrong" and "I think you're wrong" are two different things. If I say  $1+1=732$ , then I'm wrong. If I say "God doesn't exist" you may think I'm wrong, but you can't conclusively say I'm wrong.

And you can see the destructive power of something without witnessing its ultimate intended use. So by your example, if I see an automatic rifle tear up a cardboard target or practice dummy, I think "Well that's not a real person, so it couldn't possibly hurt me." :rolleyes:
