We found a topic that ACK and I can agree on 100%

I asked this question on WW forums and it got deleted.

How many of you have been a victim of terrorism, lost a loved one to war, have been in a war or even served in the military?

I can answer yes to almost all of these questions.

I am a Desert Storm Veteran, served 8 years in the US Army Reserves with 2 of those years active.

I am a fire fighter. I have been for 11+ years. Fire Fighters are a family. Whether we know each other or not, we all grieve when on of us falls. September 11, 2001 was a very sad time in US history. We lost 3000 people in an unprovoked attack. 10% of those that died were fire fighters people that devote their lives to saving others, no matter what the dangers. When one of us falls, the whole fire fighter community across the country hears about it and mourns the loss.
Now tell me again why you think the US attacking Iraq is illegal. Iraq has long supported terrorism. Even to the point of giving money to the family members of suicide bombers in Israel. That in my book is supporting terrorism. Iraq has used WOMD on his own people. Is that not a crime? Well I guess to a Nazi it is not a crime.

As for France, please explain how a country, whose current president had Saddam as a contributor to his election fund, can be impartial. France is no longer an ally of the US. IMO France is now an enemy of the US. No war is clean and no war is fair. But war is a fact of life. Egg and all of you Anti-American dreamers your intentions for peace may be sincere, but you're aiming you anger at the wrong country. Iraq has played Europe like a cheap violin.
