spotelmoi agree, 'something should be done' it is just unclear as to what more we can do. quietly supporting peaceful resistance is the best thing to try first in my opinion. if that doesn't work or if the situation escalates, then other options should be considered.

I have begged the question to our dear friend Duke with no response.
What are the other options ? After 12years of the same song and dance what diplomatic options do we have left ? Saddam has constantly lied to the world why should 'the future' be considered any different ? The most important point is this. When does it stop ? And when the world does say STOP NOW ! THIS IS ENOUGH ! How do you enforce it ? We have economic 'encouragement' currently in place but Saddam doesn't care. He rakes in $$ building MORE palaces while people starve and get substandard facilities he provides to them (food, medical etc..)

So to reiterate(sp?)
What other options ?
When is the deadline ? (a real deadline not a ever moving one)
If he fails to comply how to you enforce international law ?

When people say we need more time I say twelve years was plenty of time for Saddam to change his ways and totally comply with the UN. Twelve years NOT months...repeat after me, years not months. Now repeat after George W., days NOT weeks. Now this seems to be hours not days..
