

---

Subject: eggmac the pacifist

Posted by Commando no. 448 on Thu, 20 Mar 2003 11:49:28 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

I feel this analogy will best describe post war Iraq.

The "colitiion of the willing" is picking up Iraq. Dropping it and watching it slowly fall like a balloon. Trying to gently blow it into the right place. Yet any wrong shove will send it into a worse place than it currently is in.

Why is this so? It will take a long time for post-war Iraq to find its place in the world. And that place could be anywhere from a beautiful democratic nation to a constant civil war with parties holding power for brief durations until the next revolution starts. I am sure there are examples where this has happened but I do not have time to find them. Maybe Bangladesh, after independence from Iraq the country had a civil war and is currently having such a low standard of living.

---