A lot of people are likely to condemn this little movie and call it a lie because the maker was too biased and emotional, and focused too much on serious issues that could have been feedback on you Ranger.

Even if the payments are cut, you're still responsible for your way of life anyway, and it would be stupid to count on payments from the government to let you live your life. People are more likely to call you a lazy freeloader living off of welfare checks and tell you to get a job.

It is nice that you serve, and it sucks that your payments got chopped, but you really can't expect to depend on those anyway. You got to go out and get a job, and an education to get a good one worth having, otherwise people who complain about the cuts are BSing even if the statement is true.

You're going to want a few good cards in your hand, and the first card you will want to support you into getting a good job is a high school diploma, then next is either some sort of college degree or military service record w/o a dishonorable discharge. That should get your foot in the door for at least a job that pays 3$ more than minimum. If it doesn't, well hell you're a person with talent of some sort, if you know what that is, pursue a field of study that interests you, and if you don't know, look to your past and what you have been great at, other than sex and beer consumption, and then base your chosen career on that, because hell, it is better to do something you like and get paid for it rather than do something you hate that pays a butt load.

Sure it will take a little bit of time and money, maybe even have to get financial aid support, but it is better than a lazy boy chair and government checks.

Even if there were no cuts in the payments you still could not get the car you want, the TV you deserve, and the big house you would like to live in on those payments. I say screw trying to live a mediocre life on government checks from military service, I want more money, and I can get more if I use the service as a reference on my next job application, SO FUCK SITTING AROUND, I WANT A REAL PAY CHECK!
