

---

Subject: High School

Posted by Infinint on Fri, 14 May 2004 20:48:43 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

I have done pretty much the opposite of all the stuff you guys are telling gunrun to do. I'm one of the laziest people, I have never studied, ever, I rarely turn in large projects (never did one this year), yet I'm passing all my classes. If your smart you can slack off, if you want to. Not a good choose as colleges will look at your grades, but if you want to you can still get by without doing much. I acted like I was on top ever since I got in, never did any one really like it till I beat up a kid (commonly referred to an oompa loompa at my school) on Tuesday. Its not like your first impression is gona stick in high school. I went from 110% nerd to Mr. Popular. Don't ask. If you be yourself, and people like you, you will succeed. But if people don't like you, being yourself, change or be rejected. Either works, but you probably know which one is better. Also, be like me, and get on the good side of your authorities, it will pay off. When i beat the kid up, the principle had no trouble believing that he started it, which he did, and wisent as hard on me. If your late and get sent down, and you've been a good kid, he/she might let you off easy. Also, if some one confronts you willing to fight, don't fight them, be calm, and be very rude. People will wonder how you remain calm and can act like that in face of a guy who can kill you, makes people respect you more, works for me. aka, beating people up isent always the best way to go.

---