okay, i read the rest of the posts:

Having passed thru high school and garnered knoweledge and wisdom therefrom:

You're all idiots. (j/k)

But seriously. High school is not a big deal. The only advice i can give you is don't let yourself get pushed around. Don't let anyone put you through hazing. If someone gives you a hard time or pushes you around, then give it back to them. 99% of bullies will piss off once they realize you have no problem breaking their nose. If you don't feel like you're strong enough/capable enough to do this, then get in kick boxing, or a martial art. (i'm a 2nd degree black belt in ITF taeKwonDo, working on third). You'll get fit, confident, and people won't mess with you.

You'll do fine. Join some sports, clubs, music. Get involved, make friends (btw choir is a great way to get to know chicks! Im NOT friggin' kidding.)
don't worry about girls and shit, that stuff will come in time. Let it happen.

Copy out everything you and everyone said here, and save it on your comp. When you graduate in grade 12, look back on this stuff and realize how RIDICULOUS most of the advice here was you'll see that it wasn;t a big deal at all.
good luck man!
