It's sad that when everyone needs a scapegoat, the people with power would shrug the blame off on those who prevented that day from becoming an even worse tragedy. How many lives did the members of this comission save that day? None? Just checking. Eveyone who participated in that rescue effort deserves the highest honors.

Hell, some of the people in those towers were on the floors above where the planes hit- places where no one could have possibly reached, not even by helicopter(the fire would have played hell with the surrounding air, making the use of a helicopter not only suicidal, but a risk to other buildings). This is in the same category as suing doctors for not saving people with terminal illnesses. Every member of that comission should be ashamed of themselves.
