I'll repeat to you what I said on the RenAlert forums:

You should not only pay attention to the headlines of the story of the article you intend to view but also the source of the article itself. Have you seen the homepages of either of those websites? That aztlan.com one has an Israeli flag with a swastika in place of the Star of David with a link to a picture of a Palestinian with half his head blown off and a link to a petition to stop US military aid to Israel. Take a look at that and tell me that's an objective view of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. The entire site is filled with stuff like that. Here's another article of interest on that website. The author says "Pat Tillman got what was coming to him." For those who don't know, Pat Tillman was an Army Ranger who turned down a $3.6 million contract to play football for the Arizona Cardinals to go fight in Afghanistan. The rensen.com website is so vehemently anti-Bush that it'd be hard to take anything that it says on that website seriously. If there is any truth on either of those websites, it's buried beneath so much anti-Bush, anti-America, anti-Israel bullshit that it'd be hard to actually find any, which would mean both websites are heavily biased (they, quite obviously, are HEAVILY biased).

There are a lot of websites that publish bullshit propaganda and call it "news" and say they have evidence to back every little bit of bullshit up. Stick with the more bona fide sources like Fox News or even CNN would be better than that shit.
