The test was skewed because you were already on the field in a suitable position (i.e. behind cover in this case) when the med drove out. You had a hill to hide behind while he didn't. You could have camped even farther back so that he couldn't even hit you, in which case the med has no chance, which is what we've been saying all along. In a situation like that the med is going to lose every time.

If you do that test out in the open, say on Under, and have both people drive out at the same time, the arty's not going to fare near as well.

Again, I think it's cool you made some videos, but all you're doing is reinforcing what we've said already: arties do a lot of damage but are fragile.
