DeathgodKIRBY098I hate to say it, but Europeans in general are far too uptight about "culture".

The French have a government agency dedicated to maintaining the "integrity" of the French language so words like "Big Mac" don't come into common usage in French dialogue.

I wholeheartedly agree with the French on that one... I think they have a great language, and if we took as much pride in our culture as they did I think America would be a much nicer place as a whole.

While I see your point, Elitism tends a society towards the type of stagnant inbreeding that causes mediocrity, not greatness.
