But you have to understand concessions can't really be made for people with really old PCs/hard drives. Hard drives the size you're talking about are even less than baby size. I had a 20Gb drive and that was back in 2000. Hard drives these days are actually pretty cheap when you think about it. An 80 gig here in europe is less than 50 quid.

Also, if you only have 7Mb free you must be running into problems all the time. Hard drives are supposed to have about 1 gigabyte free (although there is 1 gigabyte your computer never uses, to keep the drive running as optimally as it can) but maybe the case is different for smaller drives.
