
Subject: Michael Moore Has Competition.
Posted by NHJ BV on Mon, 14 Jun 2004 12:10:26 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

CrimsonWe underestimated the capabilities of Al Qaeda and lost 3000+ lives on 9/11... why make the same mistake again?

Apart from whether or not I agree with this, it's this kind of comments that make people believe Saddam had ties with Al-Qaeda.

liberatorI don't actually dislike Mr. Moore, I don't like him either but that is beside the point. His method of attracting attention to himself for his self aggrandizement is pathetic. He is nothing but a tool for the Left in America and Abroad.

Not all the left supports Moore. I do not consider him objective or anything.

liberatorIt makes sense when you think about it.

The Left considers America to be the focus of evil in the modern world, no matter what it is, it's America's fault.

Sure, whatever.

liberatorThe Ozone Hole in Antarctica?

The Left: It the dirty American's fault. They drive SUVs and pollute.

In actuality, as science is proving, the hole in the ozone layer is a natural effect and is part of the cyclical nature of the Earth's atmosphere.

Over the years, certain chemicals and other stuff used in fridges (CFC's) have been banned from use, which could very well explain the closing of the gap. Depletion of ozone is not as much caused by cars as it is by aforementioned fridges, spray propellors and other industrial uses.

liberatorGlobal Warming?

The Left: It the dirty American's fault. They drive SUVs and pollute.

In actuality, as science is proving, the hole in the ozone layer is a natural effect and is part of the cyclical nature of the Earth's biosphere.

It has not by far been proven to what extent human activity affects the current climatological change, but that it has at least some effect is quite clear.

liberatorThe War in Iraq?

The Left: It's America's fault! Hussein is as pure as the wind driven snow.

This only deserves a :rolleyes:

liberatorIn truth, as an American, I can say(with a degree of sadness) that Bush may have misled us when he claimed WMDs in Iraq. But, I look at it like this.

1. We(The USA) are finishing what we should have finished a decade ago in the Gulf War.
2. He(Bush) was made aware of something that precipitated the war and cannot tell the Public without either A) endangering a larger segment of the population or B)would embarrass one of our allies.(the Food for Oil scandal at the UN anyone?)
3. It's part of a longer term operation to eliminate Islamic Theocracies in the middle east and thus remove a large portion of the support for international Terror Groups and eventually create a more permanent peace.

Yes, we can clearly see the peace in the middle east. Tensions are higher than ever with little sign of recovery and support for groups like Al-Qaeda is skyrocketing.

liberator The governance of a free nation must be secular to fulfill it's obligations to it's citizens equally. However, Leaders of said governances must have a strong foundation in ethics and morality that comes from religion to lead well.

Iraq was a very secular nation. And I fail to see why morals must come from religion.
