Sorry for the double post, but there are some issues I want you to address specifically from this.

NodbuggerBut Saddam has used them in the past, he has made them, and according to human nature he will do it again.

I'm not debating whether or not Saddam might try and obtain WMDs again. I'm telling you that there are no WMDs found in Iraq at this point. How does this justify the war on Iraq? Calling it a "War on Terror" doesn't justify invading a nation on shaky pretenses. Also, claiming to be "finishing" what the Gulf War started is ridiculous (not necessarily said by you, but the principle applies). I suggest you read this and find out why this is so.

Quote:Just like people that do drugs. They do drugs go to jail, they get out and 3 weeks later they are back in jail for doing the same dumb shit.

This is utterly circumstantial and a terrible analogy.

Quote:Like I said in my last post. I would not trust Saddam with a butter knife. And with you giving Saddam the benefit of the doubt.....that is one of the most stupid things in the world.

Don't put words in my mouth. I've said nothing of this sort, in fact, I've said the opposite. I'm questioning the justification for the United States taking it upon themselves to "liberate" Iraq, not supporting Saddam.

Quote:Saddam is not the type of person who should be allowed to run a country.

I couldn't agree more with you. But I ask you, what gives YOU the right to go and remove his power? Your own morals? Propaganda? :rolleyes:

Quote:oh, and just because we have not found a cure for cancer does not mean there isn't one.

I don't mean to sound pessimistic, but it doesn't mean there IS a cure, either.

I suggest you read the UN's UNMOVIC Thirteenth Quarterly Report on Iraq. Dated in 30 May, 2003.
