How much more does the UN need to find before it's enough? Of all people I never imagined that you would jump on the bandwagon of the stupid.

Read the quarterly report. It says that Iraq has been dismantling the SA-2 missiles, but there some that still remain.

"As of 17 March 2003, two thirds of the Al Samoud 2 missiles declared by Iraq to have been deployed had been destroyed, as well as one third of the associated logistics and support equipment."

That seems awfully close to the war to me. I don't know about you, but once bombs start flying at my country despite my non-proliferation, all bets are off.

But I'm not the Iraqi military. How do you know those scrap engines aren't the remainder of the arsenal being sold for much needed money?
