GizbotvasCrimsonAnd warranto, why would you listen to what the press said were the reasons? They want Bush to fail. Anything that's bad news for the US is great news for the Democrats.

Actually that's not true.

The PEW Charitable Trust Foundation released non-partisan research which stated clearly that the media "favors" Bush, with almost 75% of his network television coverage being favorable towards the administration.

The myth that the Media, comprised of the world's largest corporations, is somehow LIBERAL is sort of comical. Liberals do not control the wealth and power in this country, but will always influence it's cultural reform as that is done by the youth in this country which is almost always Liberal.

The most compelling evidence to the contrary lies in this poll they did:

Mind you, this is in reference to the Bush/Gore campaign, but it clearly shows that people perceive the media as "pulling for Gore".

This recent poll:

Seems to be the one you were referencing. It shows that many people feel that the media is "too easy" on Bush. That's not the same as the media favoring him. Of course if you're referring to a different survey, please use the links I provided here to find the poll yourself, because I'm sure you read the interpretation on some liberal website instead of finding the actual poll results and methodology.
