JavaxcxKIRBY098I beleive GW is a good man. I believe he thinks what he is doing is right. I support him because he has strength of resolve, and more character than anyone since Ronnie. I believe that in the end he will have proven himself vindicated, but I don't have to agree with everything he does.

I've tried to steer away from targetting Bush exclusively in terms of the War in Iraq. For reasons very similar to this. I agree with you in saying that he has the best of intentions in mind. But remember that quote, "the road to hell is paved with good intentions". He's a strong leader who has the ability to obviously empower nationalism, but I don't agree with his resolve. That doesn't make him a bad leader per se, but it does leave a lot of room for debate.

He has, irregardless of methods, been proven correct in North Korea, and Iran. Both have active nuke programs, and could care less about UN mandates. I take it on credit that GW is right about Iraq too. Someday we will find that he was. It's already starting to bear out as true somewhat, as stated by one of our detractors.
