Subject: A sad day for Republicans
Posted by Nodbugger on Mon, 28 Jun 2004 03:32:20 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

JavaxcxTell you what kid, go watch Fahrenheit 9/11 and take a look at the Iraqi families destroyed by the war. Go and watch that and tell me that was the best way to deal with the threat of terrorism.

I still would argue that the American Special Ops (which has been VERY successful in the past) would be a much better way of dealing with the situation of Saddam. In fact, I would even go as far as to bet that the UN would've supported the US in a LOT larger numbers if they weren't going to blast the hell out of innocent people.

But yeah, you're right. War is the simpliest way to go about destorying a population. It doesn't say much for the conquerers, though.
Hey, my dad was in Iraq for a year.

He was stationed near one of the poorest cities in Iraq. They made Harlem look like Beverly Hills. They had no roads, schools, or clean water.
They now have that and tons more. They have business there they have food they have all new conveniences.

What we did is what we knew what was going to happen.

These people could have either been terrorized and treated like shit for 50 more years or what is happening now. A few months of violence then after that they will be fine.

Do you know how many civilians we killed before d-day? the French death toll 30min into d-day was over 3000. People. I believe the total came to over 10000. We killed more French civilians on d-day then German soldiers.

But word war two was worth it.