

---

Subject: A question

Posted by liberator on Tue, 18 May 2004 05:16:58 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

This is gonna sound stupid, and it is, but what kind of issues am I going to have on a modem connection at 53333 bps?

I thought I was going to be able to make it till fall, when I can get my cable modem back but I'm jonesin' bad.

I know to stay off of enormous servers like FastCONN 1 & 2 and their 50 player matches, but I deadly serious when I ask IS IT POSSIBLE?

---

---

Subject: A question

Posted by Aircraftkiller on Tue, 18 May 2004 05:19:29 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

No.

---

---

Subject: A question

Posted by Blazer on Tue, 18 May 2004 05:44:59 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

There are lots of modem players who don't have much problem. Steer clear of the bigger games though.

---

---

Subject: A question

Posted by Weirdo on Tue, 18 May 2004 06:14:41 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

I had in the early time a 64KB ISDN connection. But I never had any serious problems. Yes sometimes it happens that you get lag, but it isn't that extreme.

I remember back then with that connection I joined a server, together with a friend of mine, who already had a 512KB upstream ADSL connection. For some strange reason his pc had a worse ping then me. At some point in the game the host began complaining about him laggin the game, and evtually kicked him for it. I found it very funny, my friend, for some reason, was less amused.

---

---

Subject: A question

Posted by liberator on Tue, 18 May 2004 06:32:03 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

I'll give it a try then, and see how it goes.

---