It's a scary thought to even think what would have happened had the Axis powers won the war.
What would have happened had Hitler repulsed the Normandy invasion? What would have happened had he taken Moscow from the Russians and killed Stalin himself? Hitler was pure evil.
Had he won, pure evil would have triumphed over good. The best way to describe what would have happened if the Axis powers won WWII is Hell on Earth.

I heartily thank and salute each WWII veteran who contributed in the triumph of good over evil.

There's a movie about that, you know.

http://www.imdb.com/title/tt0109779/
Quote:Fatherland is a political thriller that plays in Nazi-Germany, that is to say, an imaginary Nazi-Germany. The Nazis won WWII and Hitler now rules the biggest part of Europe as an empire that he called Gemania or "Das Neue Deutsche Reich". He is close to turning 75 and not only big celebrations are prepared, but also the coming of the new American president Kennedy to Germania to revive the bonds between the two countries brings exiting times. The Germans are still fighting Russia in the East and Hitler needs America to make sure he will be able to keep and expand his empire. Most of the empire is peacefull and prosperous. The SS has become the police-force and the Gestappo is something similar to the FBI or CIA.

My squadron had it's final parade this morning. It was an interesting experiance seeing as we found it difficult to get representavives from the Cadet League and such, everyone was at a D-Day celebration!
