The Demolition Truck is a suicide vehicle, piloted by one player. It costs $2,400, is reasonably fast, and has no armor whatsoever. 100 points of health ensures that it will die from two clips of a Rifle Soldier's weapon.

Demolition Trucks are best used as sneak attack units. They're not designed for full-frontal assaults. Use a diversion and attack unexpectedly.

They do the same damage as they did in Red Alert, destroying buildings like the Power Plant and the Advanced Power Plant, yet leaving most structures alive with varying degrees of health.

The model and texture used in the screenshots posted is the old version. A new version will be shown within a short period of time.

If detonated manually, it will not harm friendly units. If destroyed by an enemy, it will light up any unit around it. It is an efficient infantry killer, almost all soldiers within its blast radius will die.

Try to be careful with them in groups. If one blows up due to enemy fire, it will cause the rest to light up in a chain reaction, wasting your credits.

Ignore the test level, it's the old version of Zama that we're going to get rid of.

Atomic is nuclear, it just happens to be purely nuclear Fission whereas the current generation of Hydrogen bombs involve both nuclear Fission and nuclear Fusion. Really, it's one thing to correct people when you're right, but when you're wrong...

In reality you would have to pay for the life of the person who is using the suicide bomb truck. That costs a fair bit and as said above the cost of explosives.

It causes a nuclear explosion, but it's not a nuclear weapon. It's an atomic weapon, hence it's called an "atom bomb."

Bomb", so RenAlert should use "Atomic Bomb" for the sake on consistency.

You can't call a hydrogen bomb an atom bomb, because it isn't one. The dictionary clearly shows the differences, they may be related in the event that they're a nuclear detonation; calling them all atom bombs or nuclear weapons is the equivilant of calling Hum-vees a tank. They're similar, yet they're different.

An atom bomb derives its energy from fission.

A hydrogen bomb derives its energy from fussion.

BOTH are nuclear bombs.

Actually a Hydrogen bomb is an Atom bomb, or using the correct name Atomic Fusion. It uses Fission (see Atomic) reactions to initiate a Fusion reaction, so far there are no nuclear weapons that use only Fusion.

Also I'm confused AK, are you trying to say that the term Nuclear Weapon applies only to Hydrogen bombs, it applies to all weapons using Nuclear reactions, be they A bombs (Fission) or A=>H Bombs (Fission to Fusion).

It was referred to as an atom bomb in Red Alert, so that's what it should be referred to as here.

Atom bombs ARE nuclear bombs, they're not just similar or related.

It doesn't matter how the reaction starts, what matters is:

The name.
The delivery method.
The explosive yield.

And a few other factors. Atom bombs are not nuclear or thermonuclear weapons. They are primitive forms of a nuclear device.

You're getting a little carried away with this grammar nazi thing. First with the "Nod, not NOD." That was entirely opinion, they've spelled it both ways in various C&C games. Then there's the thing where you want people to use the word texture instead of skin, when in fact skin is often the appropriate term for the occasion. Now you're trying to tell people that there's no such word as "nuclear bomb," when in fact both atomic and hydrogen bombs are types of nuclear weapons.

You're a good modder and I respect your work, but it's ridiculous to constantly try to control the way other people write.

AircraftkillerYou can't call a hydrogen bomb an atom bomb, because it isn't one.

This is a side issue, which I am not going to take.

The critical point is he called it a "nuclear warhead"

Aircraftkillercalling them all atom bombs or nuclear weapons is the equivalent of calling Hum-vees a tank. They're similar, yet they're different.

Taking your analogy for a second:

Hum-vee = Atom bomb.

Tank = Hydrogen bomb

Vehicle = Nuclear bomb.

In other words "Nuclear Bomb" is a term which encompasses all of the other names:

- A-bomb
- Atom bomb
- Hydrogen bomb
- Fission bomb
- Fusion bomb

Hence SuperFlyingEngi was correct when he said "nuclear warhead".
