If you're using WinXP, a separate useraccount might be an easy way. Then install Renegade on that and password protect it. Or you could download some program that sets password for...ehh..other programs...like this one, with a quick Googling:

I wont make a seperate account, well because my computer sucks and last time i did it my brother was like trying to get me introuble becasue im slowing down the computer blahblahblah while he has like 5gigs of shit downloaded from kazza.... Now he wants to take off IE hes saying IE is why are computer is running slow :rolleyes: what an idiot

If he has one of the CD's is it possible for him to get on because of the auto run?

IE in itself doesn't make the computer run slow...it's the crap that gets on your computer through IE's 600 gazillion security holes. And all that junk from Kazaa.

Creating accounts does not slow down computers. Slap your brother if he thinks otherwise, because he is the reason the computer is running so slow. Unless your internet habits are as questionable as his are.

No there not im not as stupid as him, i dont download shit that has spyware/adware in it such as Bargain Buddy, BonziBuddy (He used to love), And Moe Money Maker. At a time he even downloaded SpyBlast to get rid of the spyware (SpyBlast incase yyou didnt know claims to get rid of spyware, but it actully causes pop ups) What an idiot :rolleyes:
