I didn't get to see it except the clips in the trailers. How did it end?

Hmmm. Interesting way to end it.

Some detail please...

Uh...I never saw the movie, and I probably never will, owing to the fact that the entire concept was just a big spin off of Resident Evil [Which I did see, but was sadly not enjoyable].

Actually it was a re-make of the granddaddy horror movie of them all. The original DoD movie was made back in 1979.

And I liked RE. I thought the evil computer was a nice addition to the whole concept. Can't wait for RA2.

It sucked. You see a couple tits, people suddenly disappear and there are a lot of zombies. There were some cool guns the one guy has, but he ends up risking life for a couple because he was injured and didn't want to go on. I forget if he survives at the end... At the end two people actually make it alive, some dude and chick.

There was some cool killings in it, but overall I give it a 2.5/5.

I like the original movies better.

Night of the Living Dead (1968), Dawn of Dead (1978) and Day of the Dead (1985).

Not a big fan of remakes.

It has always amazed me how infinitely stupid they dumb down the survivors to be in these movies.

If this happened in my neighborhood I would take the following precautions:

1. Get in car, and bring firearm.
 2. Go to the local gun store, and take anything that fire explosive rounds, and large caliber weapons would be S.O.P.
 3. Go to a car dealership, and get myself a shiny new F350 Dump body.
 4. Go to local grocery store, bring a large caliber weapon, and do enough shopping to make the F350 work.
 5. Stop at an outdoors store, and get cold weather gear. Bring large caliber firearm.
 6. Head to Alaska. Zombies are dead, therefore they produce no body heat, and cannot be in the cold because they would freeze solid.
 7. Find Military base in Alaska, and set up a perimeter.
 8. Watch all the movies I never had time to watch before because I was trying to pay the mortgage by working myself to death.

LMAO... You are already dead. You would never make it to Alaska because you picked a Ford over a Chevy :twisted:

I'd do 1-3, except that my vehicle of choice would be a Nissan Z350.

People who pick one brand of car over another solely on the brand name are retarded.

DeathgodPeople who pick one brand of car over another solely on the brand name are retarded. It's not the brand name, it's the quality of the vehicles. Some just prefer how Chevy runs compared to Ford.

Well, I can see that you haven't been driving long or you can't drive yet.

I have owned 3 Fords (1979, 1984 and 1989), 1 Chevy and 1 Pontiac.

The 3 Fords didn't even last a year each and none reached 125,000 miles.

The Chevy 1 ton (1973), I bought with over 100,000 miles and sold it with over 200,000 (only replacing the transmission once). That truck is still running today.

The Pontiac (1995), I bought because I have a family. It had 90,000 when I bought it. It now has over 160,000 miles on it. Only requiring a radiator to be replaced at about 140,000 miles (Due to some punck ass kid with a BB gun. Over 20 holes shot in to it).

So I pick my vehicles from what I have experienced.

(I have owned other cars for fun)

Fords are unreliable pieces of crap in the economy class. My father's old '94 station wagon needed the transmission replaced twice, the engine once (somewhere in the range of 100000KM), the air conditioner has taken a crap since 99', and just the other day, the pressure valve connecting the front of the vehicle (to what I assume is the intake for the air conditioner, I don't know) decided to depressurize and fall to the ground. Now the latching is totally warped due to the rough terrian nearby and the value totally useless.

You if you have to buy economy, buy Chevy. At least you're getting your money's worth.

I hate to say it, but if you want your money's worth, you need to go Japanese. I have the same 88 Mazda since 1996. Runs like a top, and has only had two oil changes in almost 10 years. A/C still works, and the car fires up EVERY day.

I am a Dodge person but you have your opinions I have mine. The Japanese car builders aren't putting the same work they use to into the cars. so the quality is dropping as seen in the last Consumers Report.

Dodge also known as MOPAR.

More
Old
Parts
And Rust

My brother had a Dodge 4x4. Bought it right off the sales room floor. 2 weeks later it needed its transfer case replace. After 7 months the transmission went. About 3 months after getting the transmission was replaced, it went again. He returned it under the "Lemon Law" for another one. After 1 year the transmission blew yet again. After that transmission got replaced he traded it in for a Chevy.

No, I just buy cars that don't suck (i.e. foreign cars). I purchase a vehicle for its practicality, not for the logo on the side. There's a reason tariffs on cars have been so huge in the past: American companies, by and large, produce crap and thus can't compete with a quality product sold for less.
