Quote:If your son has requested a new "processor" from a company called "AMD", this is genuine cause for alarm. AMD is a third-world based company who make inferior, "knock-off" copies of American processor chips. They use child labor extensively in their third world sweatshops, and they deliberately disable the security features that American processor makers, such as Intel, use to prevent hacking. AMD chips are never sold in stores, and you will most likely be told that you have to order them from internet sites. Do not buy this chip! This is one request that you must refuse your son, if you are to have any hope of raising him well.

Lol...

Quote:Computer hackers are often limited by conventional computer hardware. They may request "faster" video cards, and larger hard drives, or even more memory. If your son starts requesting these devices, it is possible that he has a legitimate need. You can best ensure that you are buying legal, trustworthy hardware by only buying replacement parts from your computer's manufacturer.

Heh... why would a hacker need a better video card?

Quote:If your son spends more than thirty minutes each day on the computer, he may be using it to DOS other peoples sites. DOSing involves gaining access to the "command prompt" on other people's machines, and using it to tie up vital internet services. This can take up to eight hours. If your son is doing this, he is breaking the law, and you should stop him immediately. The safest policy is to limit your children's access to the computer to a maximum of forty-five minutes each day.

Quote:Quake is an online virtual reality used by hackers. It is a popular meeting place and training ground, where they discuss hacking and train in the use of various firearms. Many hackers develop anti-social tendencies due to the use of this virtual world, and it may cause erratic behaviour at home and at school.

Oh nos I play quake, I must be a 1337 hax0r..

I've been a hacker since 1st grade! I've started playing Quake in first grade LOL. It was in DOS as well OMG but I always had to have my dad start it for me cause I didn't know how. I also Recently Purchased a better graphics card, RAM, and an AMD Processor. I also don't use AOL. I use Debian Linux for my webserver and am going to make my computer dual boot with RedHat Linux. I also spend about 6-8 hours a day on my computer and have installed Flash and the Flash player onto my computer!!! 1 4R3 73H 1337357 H4XX0R 3V3RZ OMG LOLZ!!!!!!1111 one one one one one LOL This is hilarious, even if it is a Joke. It would be more funny if this guy was serious though.
