opera.. that's funny. Very funny.

Now go get firefox before you get dedicated to that thing.

No. I have been using Opera for well over a year and have enjoyed it much more than any other browser I've tried. I don't want, nor do I need FireFox. Opera has all of the tools and utilities I need combined into its programming.

fair enough, but I still think that firefox is better.

The google toolbar is a really nice addition if you're using IE. I used it and blocked a few thousand ads before i switched to firefox.

The fact that you have to pay for Opera really isn't bad at all, as it seems a lot of people like FireFox because it is open-source and free. All you have in the unregistered version of Opera is a simple ad-banner that is built right into the main toolbar. And after using it for so long, paying for it is a breeze.

My IE went on the fritz yesterday, so I decided to quickly get Opera while I still could. I tried it, but I just don't like it. I think I'll try FireFox to see what I think.

Actually, now that I'm really looking into the features, I'm starting to like Opera. Now I have 3 browsers ^_^

I've always used IE.. I dont use other web browsers because I always thought that it would take too much of my time getting used to using it. Does it take much getting used to with these different browsers?

No, once you get used to Firefox/Opera you'll have a hard time believing that you actually used Internet Explorer.

I really don't see a big difference in firefox and IE (I use firefox)...
Other than popup blocking and that link toolbar, that's all I really see that is changed.

I had used IE since like 1999 and never thought of changing. Since IE started fucking up yesterday, I decided to quickly switch until it was too late. At first i didn't like Opera, but now that i started to mess with some of the stuff, I like it a lot.

I'm downloading FireFox now, I can have different browsers installed at once cant I? (God I feel like such a newb) -_-

[EDIT]

Ok, ignore the above!!

Just installed it and it looks a lot like IE, which I like. I'm just going to fiddle around with things to see what it has to offer now!

Well, you work for Reborn... What else do you expect to feel like?

Yes, you can use multiple Internet browsers if you wish.

I prefer Opera because of integrated download management, tabbed browsing (as in multiple browser windows inside of one browser), integrated e-mail services to replace Outlook, chat, and to top it off - it doesn't use much memory.

You mean it doesnt use 30Mb of memory? gasp

I'm running IE and Firefox on the same page, and heres the mem usage:

Firefox: 26.088Mb
IE: 25.648Mb

Not a lot of difference, and after a bit of usage I usually see IE heading for 40Mb =/

Right now Opera is using 16MB of memory, and 3MB minimized.
