To test this, please reinstall CP1 by using the instructions in this forum. It will not overwrite your installation, just reapply the patch. No harm done, but we get more results to see if this has been fixed.

I re-installed it a few days back, as you saw from my post.

I had to ask somebody with a successful english CP1 installation to send me the always.dbs over MSN so I would have full cp1.

Maybe, instead of the CP1 installation process, it doesn't install the always.dbs for the one it automatically selects for you. Instead, what is a good idea, is making it so, the user selects their language from the list, which tells the installer to use that specific always.dbs and not the one it wants to select automatically...

can this be done for CP1 the release?

try again, we fixed some language.exe issues since then
And make a note of what language.exe says when the installer runs

From what I remember, it deleted the 3 or 4 different always.dbs (languages).
Then, it just crashed (do you want to report this error to microsoft).

This weekend I reinstalled my operating system and language.exe crashed, but from what I can tell the patch still worked.
