Hmm. It would probably be exactly 41 years before I was born. I'd watch Hitler commit suicide in his underground bunker. I'd watch as his cronies burn his body to hide the body and keep it from being paraded around.

9/10/2001.

I think its obvious why. I would stop 9/11 from happening. I'd give my life to stop that day from happening if it was possible but its not.

As much as I would like to change certain things from happening, it's nobody's place to actually change history (if it were possible). Everything happens for a reason.

I'd do one of two things: Go back to the time of Christ and watch how it plays out... Or go back to the Salem witch trials time period and bust some serious ass in the priests misguiding people to burn witches alive for simply practicing religious beliefs.

I would travel back to early america and bring many technology and make america the most technologically advanced country. I would also show them our new weapons and let america take over the 17 hundreads' world. Who knows what would happen if america was the whole world.

I'm sure many people would love for that to happen but it could never, nobody would believe.

I wouldn't really wouldn't want to go back in time , i don't know why but it's just history to me.

I would probably go back to when I was 10 or 11 and my parents got a divorce and gave myself some good old fashioned advice about how to live my life from that point on.

Crimson, think about that decision for a minute. By giving yourself advice on how to live you life, you'd live your life differently and find yourself at different crossroads. You may have never played

Renegade or be the same person that you are now, and possibly would never have been with and/or met Blazer.

That may be true...

But if she did do it, she'd most likely live her life happier, and maybe with more meaning.

She might not play Renegade/meet Blazer, but neither would be painful losses, as she wouldn't know about it.

If i had to pick one moment in MY life that would change something personally to me, i'd go back to second grade. I wouldn't get involved with some of the people i am now, because they told me it was cool to be rude to my parents and shit, and swear at them, and its not and since i was little i thought it was and its a really hard habit to break. The little bastard ruined a good portion of my life making me look like an ass at school all the time and making me get made fun of all the through elementary school. I'd go back to 3 years ago before he moved and i'd kill the fucker. (not kill but beat the living hell out of him so bad he wishes he was dead.)

I'm sure some Oldie here has seen the Twilight Zone episode where the man goes back in time and finds himself in the 1800's right before Lincoln is about to be assassinated. He tries to tell everyone and is frantically trying to save Lincoln, but he ends up in jail. He heres while in jail that "the president has been assassinated". He realizes that even if you go back in time, you can't change the past. You can go back but things will still happen. You could try to stop 9/11 but you wouldn't be able to stop it. You'll end up in jail all depressed... Then go through some time warp thing and end up back in your gentlemens club.

Yeah, but what's wrong in just going back to observe events? I mean, if it were at all possible, anyways.

1776 is when the Declaration of Independance was signed. I think that we were officially independant from England in 1780. Possibly even before that. I could easily look it up, but I'm too lazy to at this time. Either way, America was still independant in the 1700's.
