It's ironic as well that they all try to make a statement by saying they'd move to Canada cause they just can't stand FOUR MORE YEARS OF THE EXACT SAME THING THEY'VE BEEN LIVING IN. However we all want them gone so we want to help emigrate them.

We don't have to annex Michigan either, just that very eastern portion. Like Wayne county and that. That's the heavy Democratic population. It wouldn't be a big deal, Canada is right next to that anyways.

That would benefit America as well. That would get rid of the second most "dangerous" city in America in crimes...which, of course, is Detroit.

Grand Rapids is a Major City, not even close to as big as Detroit, nonetheless it is Major and I live like 5 minutes away from Grand Rapids. Not to mention I played in Division 1A Football, do you know what that means? That means my high school had almost 2000 people who attended it. Backwater Hillbilly my ass. Look up the 2004 national SAT score stats at collegeboard.com. Sort the states by percent participation (that is, the number of people who took the SAT's over the total number of people who were in the correct age groups but did not take the SATs). Now, next to each state, write down "Bush" or "Kerry" according to who won each state. Tada!

Conclusion: states whose students are less involved with higher education and elements of higher education tended to vote for Bush.

But who knows, maybe Tennessee is actually really smart, but it's just a bad test taker, so it decided not to take it.

Detroit Schools (just about the only place in Michigan who voted Kerry.) tried this year to get the requirement lowered to .8 for GPA to be able to play, if that is the case all you would have to do is breath to get by in those schools.

"Throwing out" data that takes into account the entire nation is a lot more useful than individual cases, ass hat.

I say, "As a general trend, states with lower SAT participation voted Bush."

You say, "Well, this one school where I live was awful, and that state voted Kerry."

Your "rebuttle" is just a single example that doesn't really refute a national trend. Maybe you should take your own advice.

Unfounded? I told you how I came about it. Seems like your reason for it being unfounded is rather unfounded itself. You just state it as is without any substantial sources or reasoning.

Sure there are plenty of exceptions. But is the entire trend explained by hundreds and hundreds of individual reasons and excuses?

You haven't shown us your data about "how you came about it." You just tell us to go to collegeboard.com, do steps 1, 2, and 3, and that proves liberals are smarter than conservatives.

The burden of proof lies with you, so present your own data to us; don't just tell us to go do A, B, and C and that proves we're wrong and you're right because no one is going to do it.

You also just admitted that you're trying to prove that liberals are intellectually superior to conservatives, a notion so completely ridiculous that you cannot be taken seriously by anyone with an IQ higher than that of a brick.

You, sir, are a tool.

Now, stop hijacking the thread with your self-serving attempt to prove you're better than all the conservatives here.

You are a complete moron. The Detroit Schools are the ones that i said Sucked, not the school i attended, the school i attended was great. (let me say this slow now for you) D E T R O I T, the same place that won Kerry Michigan. Also, HOW CAN IT BE NATIONAL TREND IF THE NATION VOTED FOR BUSH, take another look at the map dumbass, most counties in the Kerry states ARE RED, meaning your little poll means nothing. Also, ever hear of something called the ACT? Well, Universities in Michigan care more about the ACT than the SAT with the exception of the University of Michigan. That means only the smartest kids in Michigan take the SATs, that also means that LESS people in the Detroit area took them because guess what? THEIR SCHOOLS SUCK , so most of your SAT scores your seeing came from Red counties in the Kerry states, not the blue crappy intercity schools.

So i ask you again, if you are gonna rebuttle to this: KNOW HOW, dont give me some Vague numbers that dont actually give me Kerry's voters educational values but the educational values of the State as a whole.

Unfortunately, it's a pdf, and I went through it manually. If you want to consider the argument won because you won't check it yourself, then consider it won.

Keep in mind however, that I never called anyone here dumb. Is it not true that the Republican party has a way of attracting low income Midwestern families? I think I've gotten the impression that many people here believe that low income is synonymous with low education, thus the correlation.

You haven't even given us a link to this pdf file you say you used. You just tell us to go on collegeboard.com and do our own research in an attempt to prove you right.

Do you honestly expect any of us to try to do that?

That's no way to convince anyone that your argument has any value whatsoever.

Either provide evidence to support your argument or concede.
