well the book was set in canada. It was a must read in school when i was in the 5th grade i think, but either way it was really good, and changed my life.

the sequels are even better.

quote from some editorial review:

Brian Robeson, 13, is the only passenger on a small plane flying him to visit his father in the Canadian wilderness when the pilot has a heart attack and dies. The plane drifts off course and finally crashes into a small lake. Miraculously Brian is able to swim free of the plane, arriving on a sandy tree-lined shore with only his clothing, a tattered windbreaker, and the hatchet his mother had given him as a present. The novel chronicles in gritty detail Brian's mistakes, setbacks, and small triumphs as, with the help of the hatchet, he manages to survive the 54 days alone in the wilderness. Paulsen effectively shows readers how Brian learns patience to watch, listen, and think before he acts as he attempts to build a fire, to fish and hunt, and to make his home under a rock overhang safe and comfortable. An epilogue discussing the lasting effects of Brian's stay in the wilderness and his dim chance of survival had winter come upon him before rescue adds credibility to the story. Paulsen tells a fine adventure story, but the sub-plot concerning Brian's preoccupation with his parents' divorce seems a bit forced and detracts from the book. As he did in Dogsong (Bradbury, 1985), Paulsen emphasizes character growth through a careful balancing of specific details of survival with the protagonist's thoughts and emotions. Moving from Australian tropical weather (45 degrees celcius) back to London at winter (0 degrees celcius) is TORTURE!

I used to wakeboard every day in the Brisbane river without wet suit, basicly in just my boardies an life vest..

But in London i don't even wanna get in the water with a thermal wet suit...

I hate the cold

God bless the mountains. Living in Calgary, it can get quite cold (not as cold as winter-peg mind you, but still cold). However, we get a wonderful natura occurance called a chinook. This can raise the temperature in the middle of a cold snap (-20C, -30C with wind chill, for an example) to plus temperatures(+2C, + 10C for example). Middle of winter, snow still on the gound (though in the middle of melting), and people are out in their shorts playing tennis, soccer, whatever.

Was that directed to me? How the fuck does 38degrees walking around with sweater blah blah compare to me wearing nothing but boxers during LA's lows?
Yes my room gets that cold.

  3. You're complaining about 65 degrees while wearing boxers? That's pathetic, dude. I've worn shorts in 40 degree weather...in May (when I was in elementary).

ROFLMAO!!!!!! 65 degrees cold????? omfg i walk barefoot outside in 65 degrees in shorts and a cut-off tee shirt. WAHAHAHAHAHAHA, although my resistance to cold is pretty good. I played football from August - November. During freezing rain, snow, and sometimes during thunder(even though we technically shouldve cancelled practice). But thats wut you do to be a state contender.

I said that was the high. Im talking about at night with 1 blanket with the low 30-40degrees. 65degrees is the high, read my post im not talking about 65degrees being cold. I actually enjoy the weather being 50-75degrees (roughly). I like the cold better than the hot. Also as I said before I have no heater, actually roughly the temperature in my room is the same outside if not colder.

Quote:his can raise the temperature in the middle of a cold snap (-20C, -30C with wind chill, for an example) to plus temperatures(+2C, + 10C for example).

Change that to...

his can raise the temperature in the middle of a cold snap (-4F , -22F with wind chill, for an
