They're all 800 x 600. Majority uses 1024 x 768 or more. Unless they're using Windows ME and before.

Because the other thread is desktop screenshots, while these pictures are wallpapers that he made.

I use 800x600 but they're a little too trippy for me. I like my simple beach scene, as pictured in the other thread. If it gets too crazy it distracts and degrades the purpose of the desktop. A place to find things and do work, not have seziures over.

I made them for my friends, and they look great on 1024x768, just the background and the image blur a little more.

too bland.... maybe adding some wet paint effects and making it look 3D would make them look better

You should go with colors that are easier on the eyes. To most people, that is just too bright to have on their desktop. Make wallpapers that are atleast 1280x1024 so most users can use them without a blur. With better colors and maybe make it a little more interesting, they'll be great wallpapers.

Still 800x600, but it makes a nice smokey blur effect on higher resolutions simplicity is bliss.

And i don't use photoshop or anything, the best tool is the image distorter, used in every one of these pictures. I haven't taken much time to make some of the nicer pictures.

you might also want to try to just add a little something to it. I spent about 5 minutes on this, and if i took some time it could be really good.

my res is 1280 x 1024, i just shrunk it down for forums. Nice simple progressive image, easy on the eyes.

the devil girl is really hard to see, on my monitor.

And the threadstarter's backgrounds look really amateurish, I guess it would look better with more effort, I'll show you mine once I get it uploaded...
