Wait, isn't that physically impossible? I don't see how those trucks could be flipped up in the air like that, especially the last one. I mean, with all the support on it. I can't believe I didn't think about that.

Hmmm could be possible. I dont really see any lines or suggestions of photoshopping.

heh, even without that the sheer force required to move the crane parallel along the road, THEN tip over is more than a something that size, pulling straight down, could possibly accomplish.

dont forget the massive weight of water.

EDIT: oh and what the hell, the tree infront of the brick wall dissapears in some of the photo's.

Guess this is fake.

The last picture in that series is a photoshop job. I saw this series of pictures LONG ago, and the last picture wasn't there.

If you want proof just closely look at the last picture and the fifth one....the white boat, and the 2 guys wearing white, in the exact same positions.

I guess someone thought it would be funny to make it look like the big truck fell in too. Guess you all fell for it.

Yes, that's a definite photoshopping. The weight of the car wouldn't be enough to flip the 1st crane over.

You must have missed what the links said. The first 8 photos are real. The last one with the 2nd crane falling in is the only one that is photoshopped.

If your having trouble seeing how the last photo has been edited then:

Look at the 5th picture and you will see a man with a white t-shirt on and he his arm kinda positioned funny. Now look at the last picture and you will see the same man in the same stance.

Also notice the nice little white boat that mysteriously reappears in the same exact spot as a few pictures before.

Here are the ones that they left off that website, I had them saved from when the whole series was on CNN, and they ARENT photoshopped, because CNN had them on their main page when it made it up there on a slow news day. Anyhow this is where those pics left off, where they enlist Fat Albert to pull out the bigger truck, however in true comical fashion Fat Albert falls in the water as well making a giant crappy looking splash!
