My own work.

A pretty sweet ride, you might say...

But seriously, I'm going to start taking driving lessons next month. Then I get a partial permit, and my parents are probably going to get a big 'ole Cadillac, since me and my dad both think they're awesome. Then I'll get a shiny black paint job, chrome all the parts, and call it a day.

I wonder if there are still any 1955 Bel-Airs around...

Hang in man - when I was 15, cars changed EVERYTHING for me. Not necessarily good or bad, it's just that all my current interests went by the wayside. I grew up in Myrtle Beach, SC & "cruising the 'vard" is what we did. I worked in high school just to burn gas...

lols Im 16, im getting my license in two months

Ya i know its gonna be awesome, i'll be able to go places and do what i want with out my parents having to take me, it won't depend onthere being able to give me a ride or not anymore. Plus i'll be able to go out and skate all the spots i've ever seen and wished i could while driving by them in the car

Manitoba driving laws suck, if I remember correctly all the driving laws here are strict, due to the fact that so many accidents are caused by careless seniors.

Here is my daily driver, 2wd GMC 3/4 ton, 350 horse 355 with tuned port fuel injection

Here is my trail rig. Its a 4x4 GMC 3/4 ton, 4.10 axles with a posi out back, locker up front, and a divorced t-case. Shes got a stock 350, about 200 horse I named her Ugly

I plan to combine the two trucks into one nice 4x4, I've got a third parts truck with a good body that will replace the rusted out parts on the GMC, It'll be a 3/4 ton 4x4 with the 355 from the GMC, a 4l80e electronic overdrive transmission, the divorced t-case, and the axles / frame from Ugly. Should be a nice rig! Get about 20 mpg too!

Bad times... I just got back in from having to dent up my back bumper pushing my dad's Dodge Dakota into the garage. It wouldn't start and he was trying to get me to push it on foot back from up near some garbage cans where it was parked. He had it in neutral and didnt see that the parking break was on, and kept asking me why I couldn't push it. So finally he realized it was on and said oh here and pulled it not thinking and the truck jumped backward with the door open hitting our basketball hoop with the door and it made this loud crack and bent the door way past its stop. Now we have a door with all broken hinges and the truck won't start. The door is all scraped up and he also lost a wrench in the wheel well trying to take off the door. It was the only wrench we had the size to undo the bolts. I tell ya things aren't going so well... Now we have to take it to a dealership to get it started and a bodyshop to fix the door and we're going to have an old scratched up truck for the price of a brand new computer or sod for around our new pool. This Whomps.

Just thought I'd share cause it has to do with my ride (and the denting up of the bumper there of)

End of March a 4.3L TBI V6 or a 5.7L TBI V8 (depends on whats available at the time) will be going in, providing my boss decides to pay me on time for once.

One nice thing about the underpowered engine my truck has is; I've never gotten a speeding ticket. There are a lot more bad things about it though.
