You wouldn't need this "tweak" had you used a real Internet browser, like Opera, which runs many times faster than FireFuck ever will.

I don't know what point you're trying to make by calling Firefox a "fake" browser. It's obviously real enough to browse websites-- making it an "Internet Browser". I actually compared the two programs on my computer (having both for web design) and opera ran SLOWER for me.

Great tweak. Makes firefox run even faster than it did before.

SEALYeah, but i don't like the ads.

It's a single advertisement banner that you can customize to show exactly what you want to see. It's not going to throw up advertisements on gardening unless you want it to. It will even fetch advertisements based on what you view, so if for example you visited cncden.com, it would advertise things based on Command & Conquer or other RTS games.

Considering it's easy to get past Opera's advertisement banner, which is barely noticable I'd say Opera is the best of the two. Especially considering it works incredibly fast upon installation, and doesn't require you to change variables in order to achieve this.

Opera displays many standard compliant websites poorly. Firefox follows the CSS2.0 standards. The difference in speed is hardly noticeable (i couldnt tell the difference after the tweak on FF). However, I have to give props to Opera for having a cooler GUI. The extra space in the toolbar just drives me crazy... i want optimum viewing space for websites.

The tweak for Firefox seems to work for most people. It wouldn't always work. Mainly it depends on the speed of your connection/how much you use your connection and/or the speed of your computer to allow pipelining.

PantherOpera displays many standard compliant websites poorly. Whenever I'm making a layout and implementing the code, if there are any problems, Opera is the first to get it right. Firefox is usually pretty good, and IE is awful. If you customize the layout of Opera, and get a nice skin you like (and crack it to get rid of the ads), you'll never be able to go back to anything else.

Try Opera! The power of Christ compels you!

I have never experienced any "large" problems displaying anything. I only had a minor bug from the Renegade Forums, which is actually fixed now, and a small displaying problem on the old RenAlert layout. Every other site I've ever visited appears to be perfectly fine. This is coming from an AVERAGE FIREFOX USER.

You're insane snipesimo. Opera loads websites ten times faster than Internet Explorer does, and Opera keeps my set of websites opened up each time I load it. So instead of having to open a new page each time, or save a session, I simply load Opera and it has all of the websites I had opened already in the process of loading up so I can view them.
